

Find the Belief Underneath

A 5-step guide to understanding what your nervous system is still protecting you from

Emotions aren't the root.

Anxiety, panic, numbness and overwhelm are protective layers. Underneath them is usually a core belief your nervous system learned long ago, like "I'm not safe" or "My needs don't matter."

The belief lives in your body, not just your mind. This guide will help you find yours.

The 5 steps

1. Notice the reaction: a moment when your reaction felt bigger than the situation.
2. Feel where it lives in your body.
3. Ask: "What am I afraid will happen here?"
4. Ask: "When have I felt this before?"
5. Finish the sentence: "Back then, I learned that ____."

Your worksheet

1. The moment my reaction felt too big

2. Where I felt it in my body

3. What I was afraid would happen

4. When I've felt this before

5. Back then, I learned that

What to do with what you find

To let a belief go, your body needs to get what it needed when it first learned
it. That's how safety gets created.
If your body doesn't feel safe,
it won't let anything go.

Start your first session at release-core.com

Not a substitute for medical or mental health care.
In crisis, call or text 988 (U.S.).